GREAT BRITAIN'S PREMIER AND A GOLF CLUB IN SCOTLAND

Rabbi Ferdinand M. Isserman

Many of us have recently witnessed with amusement the gyrations of a golf club in Scotland in the native city of Ramsay MacDonald, which expelled him from its membership because of his pacifism, and which now that he had become Prime Minister of Great Britain was seeking ways and means of reinstating him. We can appreciate the motives of the golf club in expelling Ramsay MacDonald. Here was a man who had refused to give his consent to the Great War, a man who had been ostracized by his constituency, a man who in the eyes of the mob was a traitor, a man who believed that when his country seemed to be in the wrong, it was not his duty to acquiesce. MacDonald lost his prestige, following, and his social status, and his fellow-townsmen added to seeming disgrace by expelling him from their club.

MacDonald accepted all—contempt and continuity, because of his convictions. He was more interested in his ideals than in his career. He set an example for parliamentarians. To hold office was not his end. It was to advocate certain policies that seemed to him to be of the highest interest to his country. MacDonald was a genuine patriot.

What sweet joy must be his, the former outcast's, as now he rules the empire in which he dared to maintain an unpopular cause. How fateful for the peace of the world is it, that at the head of the greatest empire stands one who opposed war even during war-time.

Not all men, who hold up ideals and who suffer for them ever live to see in their lifetimes the recognition and the vindication that MacDonald has gained in his. Too frequently the price is bravely cherished ideals is loneliness and ostracism. Too frequently the mob does not recover its sanity as it did in MacDonald's case. But the idealist is the man who is ready to submerge himself and his fortune for a cause. He is ready to pay the price for his conviction, and his reward be he recognized or unrecognized always the knowledge of having been loyal to the noblest promptings of the heart. Though few idealists have been able to laugh at the gibes of their age and the respectability they represent as has MacDonald, the world will continue to produce them, because there is something noble and unconquerable in the finest souls among the sons of men.

HIS MISHKEND—A PERSONALITY WHO WAS NEEDED

We learned with pain and anguish of the death of Rabbi Louis Mischkind of Wilmington, Delaware. An ailment, fell last March, severe surgical operations, and the fellow-student and colleague we admired and respected "sleep the last sleep." But a few months ago Mischkind came to address the Menorah Society of the University of Toronto and its graduate group. He was our guest. He was full of plans—books he had written, books he planned to write on Judaism and Jewish matters. His plans will never be realized.

REAL GOOD WILL

Mr. Louis Marshall is to be complimented on the vigor of his tone in his exposure of the missionary motive which underlies the so-called good-will activities recently indulged in by a section of the rabbinate and a wing of the Christian ministry. In the interchange of correspondence between Louis Marshall and the Rev. Alfred W. Anthony leader of the American Christian Good-will Committee the true purpose and significance of the movement were brought to the surface. Mr. Anthony in a seizure of candor admitted that, notwithstanding its good-will professions, the thought is still uppermost in the minds of Christian ministers that non-believers must be induced into their fold. In his forthrightness he even confessed to the naive belief that Jewish exponents of the cults are similarly striving to tempt Christians to Judaism. Mr. Louis Marshall in his comprehensive reply made a masterly analysis of the situation and his enunciation of the Jewish position in the matter was dignified and sound.

Judaism and Christianity, and Jews and Christians have need living side by side for some two thousand years. Judaism is a non-proselytizing religion. It is satisfied to accord to it and courtesy to other religions. This attitude is clearly expressed in the statement that in the "future people of other religions will have a place in heaven." Jews have not oppressed and persecuted their neighbors. On the other hand the professors of Christianity have hardly ever ceased to assail and torment those who dissented from them. Even today in the supposed age of enlightenment the last lines of the Jewish text of [illegible] In Europe the technique of persecution is [illegible] In America and in Canada [illegible] are the Jews [illegible] discrimination may be a subtle one, but it is none the less real and hurtful. Can Jews get positions [illegible] can they join the better golf clubs, can they move in better circles? It is unnecessary for us to enumerate details. The situation is well known. We may have our faults. We may be queer, namely, unlike others. But are the Christians right and justified in their attitude? They have a religion taken from the Jews notwithstanding, which teaches them the right way of living, the decent manner of treating neighbors. It is for them to search their hearts and consciences. They need soul-searching. When we step on someone's toes accidentally or inadvertently we humbly ask his pardon. It puts us in a good-will conference. If we are invited we apologize. We show that our offensive conduct is not characteristic of us. When we deliberately transgress we have a right to expect repentance, a good feeling.

Christianity as a religion, in the three centuries has made some gestures of amends. It is [illegible] as a result of the [illegible] of the repentance. We Jews have a [illegible] with a [illegible] pariah and has cut off many people who have no [illegible] the heart [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] and admit a flood of light and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] names in peace and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] let them do so concretely, in definite spheres where prejudices now prevail. Let them open their golf-clubs and their summer resorts, let them remove their petty discrimination in apartment houses and office buildings, let them offer the Jewish youth a fair show in business—the Jews will come to them with full hearts bubbling over with friendship and good will.

Our reform rabbis living in a hollow world of echoes and shadows, away from the cruel arena of life's battle, weary of their verbal gymnastics and transcendental calisthenics have seized upon a huge balloon which they fatuously believe to be loaded with profound realism. This balloon is the good-will movement. They play around with it. They imagine they are juggling with worlds. They are tossing about containers of air. In real life the men who profess to be equally keen about the game are well protected with bristles of prejudice and discrimination which puncture holes in their theoretical ballons.

We do not expect the millenium. It will be a long time before the lamb and the lion will share the same sleeping quarters. But in attempting a rapprochement between peoples of divergent types it must be borne in mind that there are certain characteristic and vital features which must be guarded, and kept as the last things to be surrendered. Religion and culture are among the treasured possessions and distinguishing marks of groups. In our quest of good understanding with other people we must bear in mind that there are certain things which we can never give up,—namely the basic qualities of our group personality. A.B.B.

Rabbi Isserman's Editorials

The American rabbinate needed Mishkind. It could ill afford to spare him. He was not merely a rabbi functioning well for one congregation. Mishkind's influence was national, and would have grown with time. A brilliant student both at the University of Cincinnati, where he graduated at the age of nineteen with Phi Beta Kappa honors, and at the Hebrew Union College, Mishkind's brief career realized his promise. He was an independent thinker, a preacher of courage. His aim was not to please his congregation, but to instruct and to elevate it. He continued his studies.

He was a foe of sham and hypocrisy. He loved truth more than fame, and cherished his convictions. He never straddelled issues. He feared them. The Menorah group recognized his intellectual power and made him one of its leading spirits. Mishkind believed in social justice and was one of the first to protest at the old and reactionary social justice programs of the conference of rabbis. The newer social justice programs of the conference, which have won wide recognition, are partially due to Mishkind's efforts. We could go on and on and list his abilities as linguist, as preacher, as communal leader, but painful is every stroke of the pen. In the critical days that loom ahead for religious leaders, because of the attacks on religion by the new sciences, men who understand both science and religion will be needed more than ever. Mishkind knew both. The American rabbinate is impoverished by his passing. Many of his colleagues could have been spared more readily.

The woman and the two boys were apparently dead, but the sergeant and his men set to work practising artificial respiration. A short time later the ambulance arrived and the doctor assisted in the work, but it was evident that they were beyond recall. The morgue wagon was summoned. Arrangements were made to notify the relatives and the officials of the club decided to close the course. It was announced last evening that the course would remain closed until after the burial of the victims.

Alexander McLean had been connected with the club for several years. He was one of the favorite caddies of the club, and acted as assistant to the course professional. He was a good golfer and frequently was called upon to play with members when partners were scarce.

Discrimination

Some rock contains gold—or silver, or copper, or nickel, or any one of a score of metals that are profitable to mine.

Money invested in new mining issues is money placed with men, supposedly expert, for the purpose of locating and mining the profitable ore.

Your choice of investments should be made after careful thought, for even in the richest mining fields, the great mass of rock is absolutely worthless.

Let us help you discriminate.

BETTER UNDERSTANDING MOVEMENT IN GERMANY

A joint council of notable Jews, Protestants and Catholics has been formed in Germany as a branch of the Universal Religious Peace Conference. Among the Jews who signed the appeal are Rabbi Leo Baeck, Professor Einstein and the famous Berlin banker, Oscar Wassermann. The most prominent non-Jewish signatory is the ex-Chancellor, Prince Max.

The Jewish press of Germany has been publishing lists of hotels and summer resorts where Jewish patrons are not desired, so as to save their readers the unpleasantness of being refused when applying for reservations at such places. These "Judenrein" hostelries are increasing in number. The National Socialist Party, the official anti-semitic party, issued a Year Book with lists of resorts, hotels and pensions where Jews are not admitted, although a number of these hotels were quick to repudiate the "distinction" conferred upon them.

The Rise of David Levinsky

A Novel by Abraham Cahan

By arrangement with HARPER and BROTHERS, Copyright.

It was a warm day. My pack seemed to grow heavier with every block I walked, and so did my heart. I was perspiring freely; my collar wilted. All of which did anything but make me look as "a man who paid his bills in checks." At last, walking up Third Avenue I came across a place where there was quite a large display of jackets in the windows. Upon my opening the door and announcing my mission, two jaunty young fellows invited me in with elaborate courtesy, almost with anxiety. My heart leaped for joy. I fell to opening my bundle. The two young men inspected every jacket, went into ecstasies over each of them, and then asked me all sorts of irrelevant questions until it dawned upon me that I was being made game of. It appeared that the father of the two young men, the proprietor of the store, manufactured his own goods, for wholesale as well as for retail trade.

I received much better treatment in a store on Avenue B, but my goods proved too high for that neighborhood. As if to atone for this, the proprietor of this store, a kindly Galician Jew, gave me a list of the minor department stores I was looking for, and some valuable suggestions in addition.

My dinner that day consisted of two ring-shaped rolls which I bought in a Jewish grocery-store and which I ate on a bench in Tompkins Square.

The day passed most discouragingly. It was about 7 o'clock when, disheartened to the point of despair, I dragged my weary limbs in the direction of my "factory." When I got there I found my partner waiting for me—not alone, but in the company of his wife.

"Well?" she shrieked, jumping to meet me.

"Splendid!" I replied, with enthusiasm. "It looks even better than I expected. I could have got good orders at once, but a fellow must not be too hasty. You have got to look around first—find out who is who, you know."

Mrs. Chaikin looked crestfallen. "So you did not get any orders at all?"

"What's your hurry?" her husband said, pleadingly. "Levinsky is right. You can't sell goods unless you know who you deal with."

The following two days were as barren of results as the first. Mrs. Chaikin had lost all confidence in the venture. She was becoming rather hard to handle.

"I don't want Ansel to bother any more," she said, peevishly. "You know what the American say, 'Time is money.' Pay Ansel for his work and let us be 'friends at a distance.'"

"Very well," I said, and, producing my check-book, I asked, "How much is it?"

The sight of my check-book acted like a charm. The situation suddenly assumed brighter colors in Mrs. Chaikin's eyes.

"Look at him! He thought I really meant it," she grinned, sheepishly.

Every night I would go to bed sick at heart and with my mind half made up to drop it all, only to wake in the morning more resolute and hopeful

David Segal is the four-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. M. Segal, 3103 Dundas St. West Toronto. This chubby youngster was seated at the table eating dinner. His mother set before him a certain dish which he refused to eat. So she said, "Come, darling, eat it. Its a "mechiyah", David at last consented. After finishing it to the last bit he asked his mother anxiously, "Mother can I have some more "mechiyah"?

than ever. Hopeful and defiant. It was as though somebody the whole world were jeering at my brazen-faced, piteous efforts, and I was bound to make good, "just for spite."

I let nod of the existence of "purchasing offices" where the buyers of several department stores, from so many cities, made their headquarters in New York. Also I discovered that in order to keep track of the arrivals of these buyers I must follow a daily paper called Hotel Reporter (the ordinary newspapers did not furnish information of this character in those days). A man who manufactured neckties in the same ramshackle building in which I hoped to manufacture cloaks volunteered to let me look at his Reporter every day. This man was naturally inclined to be neighborly, but I had found that an occasional quotation or two from the Talmud was particularly helpful in obtaining a small favor from him.

I knocked about among the purchasing offices with building tenacity, but during the first few days my efforts in this direction were as futile as in the case of the New York stores. Meanwhile, time was pressing. So far as out-of-town buyers were concerned, the "mid-season" was drawing to a close. All I could see were some belated dressers. One of these was a man from the Middle West, a stout, fleshy American with quick, nervous movements which contradicted his well-fed, anguid-looking face.

He shot a few glances at my samples, just to get rid of me, but he liked the designs and I could see that he found my prices tempting.

"How soon will you be able to deliver five hundred?" he snarled.

"In three weeks."

"Very well, go ahead." And speaking in his jerky, impatient way, he went on to specify how many cloaks he wanted of each kind.

I left him with my heart divided between unutterable triumph and black despair. Five hundred cloaks! How would I raise the money for so much raw material? It almost looked like another practical joke.

But this time I was more than sure of myself. I had a considerable sum of money to show them for [illegible] impression. It would have to be my last coup of the day. I sought credit at Claffin's and at half a dozen smaller places, but all in vain. I could not stop thinking of Nadelmann's favorable face. (As if that kind of a face had any relation to my job!) But it had not, it seemed. It look as if there were no hope for me.

Finally I took the necktie man into my confidence, the result being that he unburdened himself of his own financial straits to me.

One afternoon I was moping around some of the side-streets off lower Broadway in quest of some new place where I might try to beg for credit, when I noticed the small signboard of a commission merchant. Upon entering the place I found a fine-looking elderly American dictating something to a stenographer. When the man had heard my plea he looked me over from head to foot.

I felt like a prisoner facing the jury which is about to announce its verdict.

At last he said: "Well, you look pretty reliable. I guess I'll trust you the goods for thirty days."

It was all I could do to restrain myself from invoking benedictions on his head and kissing his hands as my mother would have done under similar circumstances.

"So I do have a 'credit face'!" I exclaimed to myself, gleefully.

When I found myself in the street again I looked at my reflection in store windows, scanning my "credit face."

The Chaikins took it for granted that I had paid for the goods on the spot.

Things brightened up at our "factory." I ordered an additional sewing-machine of the instalment agent and hired two operators—poor fellows who were willing to work fourteen or fifteen hours a day for twelve dollars a week. (The union had again been revived, but it was weak, and my employees did not belong to it.) As for myself, I toiled at my machine literally day and night, snatching two or three hours' sleep at dawn, with some bundles of cut goods or half-finished cloaks for a bed. Chaikin spent every night, from 7 to 2, with me, cutting the goods and doing the better part of the other work. Mrs. Chaikin, too, lent a hand. Leaving Mazie in the care of her mother, she would spend several hours a day in the factory, finishing the cloaks.

The five hundred cloaks were shipped on time. I was bursting with consciousness of the fact that I was a manufacturer that a big firm out West (a firm of Gentiles, mind you!) was recognizing my claim to the title. I was American enough to be alive to the special glamour of the words, "out West."

Goods in our line of business usually sold "for cash," which meant ten days. Ten days more, then, and I should receive a big check from that firm. That would enable me to start new operations. Accordingly, I went out to look for more orders.

Whether my first success had put new confidence in me, or whether my past experiences had somewhat rounded off my rough edges and enabled me to speak to business people in a more effective manner than I could have done before, the proprietor of a small department store on upper Third Avenue let me show him my samples. My prices made an impression on him. My cloaks were five dollars apiece lower than he was in the habit of paying. He looked askance at me, as though my figures seemed too good to be true, until I found it the best policy to tell him the unembellished truth.

"The big manufacturers of what you buy have big office expenses," I explained. "They make a lot of fuss and you've got to pay for it. My people is not to make fuss at the tailer's expense. Our office costs very, very little. We are plain people. But that isn't all. Your big manufacturer pays for union labor, so it takes it out of you. Now, we don't bother about these things. We get the best work done for the lowest wages. The big men in the business wouldn't even know where hands of this kind could be got. We do."

I took my departure with an order for three hundred cloaks.

Birth of Graziadio Isaiah Ascoli, 1829. A conforming and enthusiastic Jew, he was at the same time one of the founders of the modern science of philology in Italy. His first work was published at the age of sixteen. From that time, he went on from one brilliant piece of research to another, illustrating almost the whole field of the study of comparative philology, European dialects, Oriental languages, and scientific phonology. Many of his works were translated into various European tongues, including English. In his vast range of activities he did not neglect his own people, editing with a wealth of erudition the ancient Hebrew inscriptions found in Southern Italy. In 1889 he was appointed a Senator of the Realm.

Opening of the first Reformed Synagogue, 1810. Isaac Jacobson (1768-1828), Financial Agent to Jerome Bonaparte, combined the ideas of the French Revolution with the teachings of Moses Mendelssohn, and his means permitted him to carry his ideals into practice. In 1801, he founded at Seesen, the capital of the kingdom of Westphalia, a boarding-school for Jews and Christians, which was imitated in the rest of the country. In 1810, he built a Synagogue for this institution. Here, for the first time in the history of modern Jewish worship, an organ was introduced. German prayers were heard by the side to Hebrew, and the confirmation of children of both sexes in the Christian manner was introduced. The sympathy of the government was on the side of the reformers, and a royal decree of July 5th., 1811, silenced the complaints of the other communities. This was the beginning of the Reform movement in Judaism, which was destined to have such momentous consequences in both Europe and America.

Every Friday

The movement for Goodwill Between Jews and Christians seems to be auf wunsch, a state to be expected from a movement which may be all right in its place but refuses to stay there. It is now about to be shelved among other things which sounded nice but don't work. As a well-behaved scheme, the chief exercise of which was the polite exchange of amenities and compliments, it might have gone on and on to the delight of visionaries, but the rash act of putting it to practical test has given it a blow from which it can not rally. As a result the Joint Conference on Goodwill Between Jews and Christians has passed a resolution recommending "some other form of conference and cooperation."

Trouble loomed when the pocket-book of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ was hit by a reduction to half in the appropriation to the Council made by the United Presbyterian General Assembly because it objected to the liberal policies of the Council and its goodwill program. When the Presbyterian body threatened to bolt the Federal Council one of the reasons given was that more favorable mention was made over the radio about Jews than about Orthodox Christians. Following serious discussions by the goodwill committee on what its scope really consisted of, it was revealed that the Jewish members were without authority. The Joint Conference, after an existence of five years, was seen to be a mere paper committee unable to plan action without the sanctions of the Federal Council. The Central Conference of American Rabbis had endorsed the goodwill movement but the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ as an organization, had not committed itself to it.

The uselessness of the Joint Conference was made plain in three instances calling for a decisive stand. One was the blood libel case in Massena, New York; another was the charge of anti-Semitism in the Kings County Hospital in Brooklyn; and the third was the presentation of the Passion Play. Spreading the message of goodwill between Jews and Christians was seen to be a work of letter-writing, club discussions, committee meetings and speech-making, in other words, its substance was talk, not practical action.

Then there was the annoying business of missionary activity by the constituent groups in the Federal Council. When the Jewish members of the goodwill committee recommended to the Christian members of the goodwill committee that Christian groups be urged to stop trying to convert Jews the Christians voted against the suggestion. Even as individuals without authority they were afraid to take action. What then could be expected from the religious body back of them? They thought it was enough to chat about practicing the principles of love in relations with the Jews and to be an outpost of goodwill in a quiet, refined way. The existence of the goodwill committee was said to be a testimony of inestimable value to the spirit of Christ and its modern disciples in a report signed by Dr. Anthony and Dr. Clinchy, the present leaders in the Joint Conference on Goodwill. And when it came to the subject of missionary activities, Dr. Anthony made it plain that the Christian churches would not give up this work. His stand was commented upon in this column at the time and a prediction that the goodwill movement would disappear was based on what he said then.

Last month Louis Marshall, the great, tireless, indefatigable, world-champion challenger questioned the sincerity of the goodwill movement because of the reference placed upon the continuation of Christian missionary work among Jews. Correspondence between Marshall and Dr. Anthony brought out the sore point which must make a goodwill movement impossible. When the Jewish leaders joined the movement in 1924 it was understood that the Christians were not "trying to change the Jews." Now Dr. Anthony says that the Christians can not give up missionary work to spread the Christian gospel among the Jews because they believe that proselyting is their faith—an essential part of their religion. Dr. Anthony in his letter makes the opposite charge that when the Jews tried to persuade the Christians to relinquish their duty to spread the gospel the Jews were trying to convert the Christians to Judaism! Marshall struggled valiantly and often almost bitterly, especially his protest against the attempts to convert Jewish children and against the Christian assumption that the Jews are inferior and in need of Christian salvation.

JULY 12, 1929 VOLUME X, NUMBER 38

These letters reveal Jewish and Christian sponsors of the goodwill movement at an impasse. Each expresses the thought of its group. The Jews sicken at the idea of the Christians trying to convert them. The Christians rebel at the idea of giving up their poaching preserves. The Jews are not likely to tolerate the missionaries in this life time. The Christians will consider it their duty to preach the gospel to the Jews for a long period to come. Therefore the goodwill movement can amount to nothing as, indeed, it has amounted to nothing up to now. f.f.c.

Social Life in 1907—
Do You Remember?—

At a meeting of the Austrian Hungarian Sick Benefit Society of Montreal officers elected were: Z. Robinovich, J. H. Besner, Isidore Friedman, H. Zentner, J. Rolovich, Ledmer and Frolitch. Miss Theresa Wolfe, of Ottawa, had been engaged to play in the musical comedy, "Military Molly," and also in "Mephistofeles," in New York City, at the Metropolitan Opera House. Assisting Mrs. Clarence De Sola at the Swastika Carnival were Mesdames A. A. Sandeman, Mrs. Meldola de Sola, Freedman, and Misses Freedman (of Antwerp) Ascher, Louise De Sola and D. Leo. Graduating from Shaar Hashomayim Religious School were Yetta Silver, Sadie Freedman, Harriet Hyams, Rachel Vineberg, Sarah Kline, Fanny Lagrn, Nathan B. Cohen, Samuel L. Manolson and Harry Vineberg. Harriet Hyams read a paper on "Jephthah." Samuel Manolson recited "The Destruction of Jerusalem." Rachel Vineberg read a paper on "Grace Aguilar" and "Elijah the Prophet in Biblical and Post Biblical Literature" was read by Nathan B. Cohen. The opening and closing prayers were given by Yetta Silver and Sadie Freedman, respectively. S. W. Jacobs gave the address to the children. At the fourth annual convention of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of the United States and Canada the condemnation of intermarriages between Jews and Gentiles was contained in a report of the Committee on Preservation of Judaism of which Rev. Meldola de Sola, of Montreal, was chairman. A declaration, a copy of which was sent to the Central Conference of American Rabbis said that a marriage between a Jew and Gentile is, according to Jewish law, illegal; that the conversion of the Gentile is prerequisite to solemnization of marriage between a Jew and a proselyte; that rabbis should not countenance such action. The report also contained an attack on the teachings of Reform Judaism.

"You're a liar and a thief!" she shrieked. "There never was a Western firm in the world. It's all a lie. You sold the goods for cash."

Her husband knew something about firms and credit, so I had no difficulty in substantiating my assertion to him.

"It's only a matter of days when I shall get the big check that is coming to me," I assured them. I went on to spin a long yarn, to which she listened with jeers and outburst of uncomplimentary Yiddish.

One day I mustered courage and called on Mrs. Chaikin. I did so on an afternoon when her husband was sure to be at work, because I had a lurking feeling that, being alone with me, she would be easier to deal with.

When she saw me she gasped. "What, you?" she said. "You have the nerve to come up here?"

"Come, come, Mrs. Chaikin," I said, earnestly. "Please be seated and let us talk it all over in a business-like manner. With your sense, and especially with your sense for business, you will understand me."

"Please don't flatter me," she demurred, sternly.

But I knew that nothing appealed to her vanity so much as being thought a clever business woman, and I protested:

"Flatter you! In the first place, it is a well-known fact that women have more sense than men. In the second place, it is the talk of every clothshop that Mr. Chaikin owes his high position to you as much as to his own ability. Everybody, everybody says so."

I talked of "unforeseen difficulties," of a "well-known landlord" whose big check I was expecting every day; I composed a story about that landlord's father-in-law; agreed with Mrs. Chaikin that it had been a mistake on my part to trust the buyer of that Western firm the goods without first consulting her; and the upshot was that she made me stay to supper and that pending the arrival of Chaikin I took Mazie to the Park.

The father-in-law of my story was Mr. Even, of course. I had portrayed him vividly as coming to my rescue in my present predicament, so vividly, indeed, that my own Eb haunted me the next day. The result was that in the evening I made myself as presentable as I could and repaired to the synagogue where he spent much of his time reading the Talmud.

NORTHERN ONTARIO CANADA

Northern Ontario, now open for settlement at fifty cents per acre, contains millions of acres of the finest agricultural land in the world. Its resources in lumber, minerals, water, power, fish, game and scenery are immense. The land calls for men to cultivate it, and in return will give health, comfort and prosperity.

What settlers say of the soil, climate, farming, and forest life, is told in a most attractive booklet issued under the direction of the Honourable John S. Martin, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario. Full instructions in regards to acquiring a title to these rich agricultural lands are also given.

For free copies write G. A. ELLIOTT, Director of Colonization, Parliament Buildings, Toronto, Ontario. "Please mention this paper."

IMMIGRATION DIFFICULTIES IN PALESTINE

The question of the entry into Palestine of large numbers of Jewish immigrants who were to remain there only for a short time in order to enable them to take part in the Palestine Economic Conference which is to be held at Basle, Switzerland, in August, is causing the Palestine Executive considerable anxiety. Under the terms of the Mandate for Palestine, Great Britain is responsible for the administration of the country, and the Palestine Government is responsible to the British Government. It is the duty of the Palestine Government to see that the immigration laws are carried out, and that no undesirable immigrants are allowed to enter the country.

Jewish Chronicle writes that the distribution of these certificates is done in a very peculiar and rather unfair manner. Three hundred certificates are provided for skilled workers and reserved for women and children dependent on them. One hundred and fifty of the remaining certificates are given to the Zionist Executive, and 200 of the women's certificates are to be given by the Government to those who will be kept as reserve for the Jewish Agency and for those who have to remain in Palestine. Another two hundred certificates were also to be given to representatives of the Jewish Agency. Of 2,850 certificates only 1,000 were issued to the Jewish Agency.

What makes the distribution of these certificates to the Jews in the hands of Jewish officials is the fact that they have to be given to persons who have been in Palestine for a period of six months, and who have left the country with the intention of returning. Many Jewish workers from Russia, Poland and Czechoslovakia have declared that they are leaving the country and do not intend to return to their old occupations.

The Government has also refused to grant certificates to the Jewish Agency for the purpose of bringing out relatives of Jews
